

The American High School Mathematics Examination is a national competitive exam sponsored by several professional societies, including the MAA, AMATYC, NCTM, AMS, ASA, and others. In Colorado, only about 60 high schools participate in this competition. It is given at each participating school in late February of each year and all students can benefit by taking such an exam. How about helping your regional coordinator (for Colorado it is William Bosch at UNC) publicize this activity in high schools? For more information call or write to Bosch.
